

COMPARATIVE STUDY OF THE CONCEPT OF "HOME" IN RUSSIAN AND UZBEK PROSE AND POETRY

Mariya GRIGOREVA,

Assistant teacher

at the Turon University of Karshi,

grigoreva_m98@mail.ru

ORCID: 0009-0007-5152-7602

Abstract. The thesis analyzes the linguocultural concept of "home" in 19th-20th century Russian and Uzbek literature. A comparative analysis reveals both universal and nationally specific aspects of the image of home as represented in prose and poetry of the two cultures. Particular attention is paid to semantic fields such as "home as a family space," "home as a metaphor for homeland," and "home as a locus of memory and loss." The study demonstrates that, while the idea of home possesses universal human significance, its literary representation is shaped by the historical context and cultural values of each national tradition.

Keywords: concept of home, linguo-cultural analysis, comparative literature, Russian literature, Uzbek literature

Introduction

The concept of "home" is one of the fundamental categories in human culture, reflecting essential ideas of homeland, family, security, and identity. In Russian and Uzbek literature, the concept of "home" serves not only a topographical but also an existential function: it symbolizes ancestral origins, connection with the land and culture, and moral and ethical values.

Relevance of the Study — Modern humanities place particular emphasis on intercultural research and issues of national identity. The concept of “home” reflects the fundamental values of both the individual and society — memory, family ties, a sense of security, and belonging to one’s homeland.

Research Methodology — The methodological foundation of the study is based on the principles of linguoculturological, cognitive, and comparative analysis. Within the linguoculturological approach, the concept of “home” is viewed as a symbolic unit of culture that expresses the worldview of a people (Maslova, Karaulov, Lotman).

The research material includes literary texts from the 19th to the 21st centuries: in Russian literature — the works of Pushkin, Tolstoy, Bunin, and Yesenin; in Uzbek literature — the works of Aibek, Erkin Vohidov, Said Ahmad, and Abdulla Qahhor. The analysis takes into account the contextual, semantic, and emotional features of the use of the word “дом”/ “у́й” (“home”). The methods of cultural and contextual analysis helped to reveal the symbolism of the home as the core of a person’s spiritual and national world.

Results and Discussions

The linguoculturological analysis shows that the concept of “home” in both cultures functions as a multilayered phenomenon that unites spatial, psychological, and spiritual meanings.

In the Russian language and literary tradition, the word “дом” is not limited to the material sphere; it metaphorically denotes peace of mind, a place of memory, and a symbol of the spiritual unity of family and homeland. In Uzbek culture, the word “у́й” performs a similar role; however, its semantic field is more closely connected with collectivism and ritual aspects — “uy” represents kinship, the hearth, the unity of generations, and a place of blessing.

In Russian literature, the image of the home is closely connected with the inner world of the individual, with childhood memories, spiritual peace, and moral values.

In Pushkin's works, the home is a place of returning to one's origins ("Once more I have visited that corner of the earth...").

For Tolstoy, it becomes a symbol of moral harmony and family unity.

In Yesenin's poetry, the home expresses a deep longing for the lost homeland and spiritual purity. Thus, the Russian concept of "home" possesses a metaphysical dimension that links the human being with the eternal foundations of existence.

In Uzbek literature, the concept of "uy" carries a distinctly collectivist and traditional character. Aibek and Erkin Vohidov emphasize the connection of the home with family, blood ties, and folk traditions. The home is perceived as a source of light, joy, and spiritual strength. In the works of Said Ahmad and Abdulla Qahhor, the home often becomes a space where moral trials and human destinies are reflected.

The extended study has made it possible to identify the following significant results:

- Universal functions of the home — guardian of memory, source of emotional warmth, and symbol of safety and homeland.
- Russian literature emphasizes the duality of the image: the home as a space of personal freedom and spiritual comfort, but also as a site of stagnation or loss (Turgenev, Bunin, Chekhov, Sholokhov).
- Uzbek literature highlights collective existence, generational continuity, and the sacredness of family ties (Aibek, Qodiriy, G'ulom, Vohidov).
- Architectural details — the Russian izba, stove, and iconostasis; the Uzbek ayvon, hovli, and aryq — carry symbolic meaning, reflecting national traditions and mentality.
- In both cultural contexts, the motif of the lost home appears frequently, associated with social upheavals and migration.

Comparative Characteristics of the Concept “Дом” / “Uy” in Russian and Uzbek Literature

Author / Asar muallifi	Quote / Iqtibos	Semantic Meaning / Ramziy ma'no
A. S. Pushkin	“Вновь я посетил тот уголок земли...”	The home as a symbol of spiritual return.
L. N. Tolstoy	“Дом — начало и конец всякого дела человеческого.”	The home as a moral foundation and harmony.
Erkin Vohidov	“Менинг уйим — қалбимда нурли макон.”	The home as spiritual light and purity of the soul.
Aibek	“Уй — оила бешиги.”	The home as the cradle of family and traditions.

Conclusion / Recommendations

The study has shown that the concept of “home” in Russian and Uzbek literature represents a multifaceted cultural phenomenon that unites the semantics of homeland, family, memory, and spiritual order. Despite shared archetypal features, each national literature forms its own model of the home: the Russian — as a space of personal freedom and nostalgia; the Uzbek — as a center of collective existence and tradition.

References:

- Maslova, V. A. (2001). Linguoculturology. Moscow: Nauka.
- Karaulov, Yu. N. (1987). The Russian language and the linguistic personality. Moscow: Nauka.
- Lotman, Yu. M. (1996). Inside the thinking worlds. Moscow: Nauka.
- Pushkin, A. S. (1978). Complete works (Vol. 3). Moscow: Khudozhestvennaya literatura.

- Tolstoy, L. N. (1979). Collected works in 22 volumes. Moscow: Khudozhestvennaya literatura.
- Yesenin, S. A. (1982). Poems. Moscow: Sovetskiy pisatel'.
- Aibek. (1971). Selected works. Tashkent: Gafur Gulom Publishing House.
- Vohidov, E. (1999). Ruhim nafasi [The breath of my soul]. Tashkent: Yangi asr avlodi.
- Said Ahmad. (1987). Kulgu va ko'z yoshi [Laughter and tears]. Tashkent: Yozuvchi.
- Qahhor, A. (1984). Selected works. Tashkent: Gafur Gulom Publishing House.
- To'xtaxo'jayeva, Sh. (2012). Milliy qadriyatlar va til [National values and language]. Tashkent: Fan.
- Bakhtin, M. M. (1986). Aesthetics of verbal creativity. Moscow: Iskustvo.
- Benveniste, É. (1974). General linguistics. Moscow: Progress.*
- Khojiyev, A. (2008). Explanatory dictionary of the Uzbek language. Tashkent: UzME.
- Rudneva, O. V. (2010). The concept of “home” in the literary text. Moscow: Nauka.

RUS VA O'ZBEK NASRI HAMDA SHE'RIYATIDA “UY” KONSEPTINING QIYOSIY TADQIQI

Annotatsiya: Tezida XIX–XX asr rus va o'zbek adabiyotida “uy” lingvomadaniy konsepti tahlil qilinadi. Qiyosiy tahlil uy obrazining universal va milliy xususiyatlarini ochib beradi, shuningdek uning badiiy talqini, ramziyligi va madaniy yuklamasini yoritadi. Tadqiqotda “uy – oila makoni”, “uy – vatan timsoli”, “uy – xotira maskani” semantik maydonlari tahlil qilinadi. Natijalar “uy” tushunchasining umuminsoniy mazmunga ega ekanini, ammo milliy qadriyatlar bilan belgilanishini ko'rsatadi.

Kalit soʻzlar: “uy” konsepti, lingvomadaniyatshunoslik, qiyosiy adabiyot, rus adabiyoti, oʻzbek adabiyoti

СРАВНИТЕЛЬНОЕ ИССЛЕДОВАНИЕ КОНЦЕПТА “ДОМ” В РУССКОЙ И УЗБЕКСКОЙ ПРОЗЕ И ПОЭЗИИ

Аннотация: В тезисе анализируется лингвокультурный концепт «дом» на материале русской и узбекской литературы XIX–XX вв. Проводится сопоставительный анализ, выявляющий универсальные и национально-специфические особенности образа дома, его символику, функции и художественные воплощения. Рассматриваются семантические поля «дом как родовое пространство», «дом как метафора родины», «дом как locus памяти». Результаты исследования подчеркивают, что универсальность концепта сочетается с локальной спецификой национальных традиций.

Ключевые слова: концепт «дом», лингвокультурология, сравнительная литература, русская литература, узбекская литература